The environment is good. Promoting independence, well-being and social engagement. People benefit from suitable facilities, personalised living spaces and effective safety measures. Leadership and management arrangements support good quality care through stable leadership, effective monitoring and a positive staff culture.

Greater oversight of records, training, medication competency assessments and personal plans is needed. Due to this, three areas for improvement were identified and issued during inspection around personal plans, medication management and oversight.

Findings:

Well-being — Good

People living at Ty Clyd experience good outcomes in relation to their well-being. Information gathered during the inspection demonstrates that staff treat people with dignity and respect and support them to make meaningful day-to-day choices. People participate in menu planning, choose where they eat their meals and influence aspects of service delivery through resident meetings and informal discussions. Supporting positive wellbeing for people living at the service.

The service adopts a person-centred approach to health and well-being. Staff seek advice when they identify changes in an individual's presentation and make referrals to appropriate health professionals. Staff continue to support people appropriately whilst awaiting professional input. The service respond well to people's nutritional and hydration needs by providing modified diets and support with eating where required. People and relatives provided very positive feedback about the quality of food and the care provided by staff.

The service supports people to maintain meaningful relationships and remain socially engaged. The service provider communicates regularly with families through newsletters, family events, functions and a relatives' social media communication channel. People participate in a varied programme of activities, including arts and crafts, exercise sessions, gardening, themed celebrations, music events, baking and community outings. The service encourages relatives to attend events and celebrations, helping people maintain important relationships. People and relatives consistently describe the home as welcoming and speak positively about staff interactions and the atmosphere within the service.

The promotion of Welsh language and culture was observed. Staff incorporate Welsh words and phrases into daily routines and create visual displays that encourage people and staff to learn and use Welsh. This supports cultural identity, inclusion and awareness of the Welsh language.

The service generally protects people from harm through effective safeguarding processes and staff awareness. Safeguarding training forms part of the induction process and ongoing supervision arrangements. Staff demonstrate a clear understanding of their safeguarding responsibilities and reporting procedures. The environment promotes an appropriate balance between safety and independence. Suitable measures are in place to monitor access to the service whilst enabling people to leave independently where appropriate.
Further development is required to strengthen evidence of how feedback directly influences service improvement. Whilst the service offers a broad range of activities, some individual activity records remain limited and do not consistently demonstrate people's levels of engagement or outcomes achieved.

Care & Support — Good

People at Ty Clyd receive good, person-centred care and support that promotes their health, dignity and independence. The service completes pre-admission assessments and gathers detailed information about people's histories, preferences, routines and support needs before they move into the home. Personal plans contain detailed assessments and one-page profiles that help staff understand what matters to each person and how they wish to receive support.

Personal plans generally contain detailed information; however, records reviewed during the inspection do not always reflect people's current needs and circumstances. Inconsistencies exist between assessments, reviews and care plans in relation to allergies, behavioural changes, activity preferences and changing health conditions. In some cases, reviews identify changes in need, but associated personal plans are not updated to reflect these changes. As a result an area for improvement was issued around personal plans.

Staff monitor people's health needs and arrange timely access to healthcare professionals, including GPs, district nurses, social workers, podiatrists, community psychiatric nurses and other specialist practitioners. Staff recognise changes in people's health, behaviour and well-being and make appropriate referrals when concerns arise. Consistent staffing and established relationships with healthcare professionals promote continuity of care and support positive outcomes for people.

Safeguarding arrangements help protect people from harm whilst respecting their rights and independence. Staff identify risks, work proactively with external agencies and take appropriate action to support people's safety and well-being. Staff complete safeguarding training and demonstrate confidence in recognising and reporting concerns.

Medication management systems are generally effective. Staff store and record controlled drugs appropriately, receive medication training and complete competency assessments before administering medicines. However, inspection findings identify weaknesses in stock control arrangements for other medication. Discrepancies in medication quantities reduce assurance that the service maintains full accountabilities for all medicines. As a result of this an area for improvement was issued around medication. However, the service has begun implementing practices to improve this area.

People receive compassionate support from staff who know them well. People and relatives describe staff as “kind, attentive and responsive”. Daily records generally reflect the care and support staff provide. Staff demonstrate a good understanding of people's preferences, routines and support needs, helping to ensure care is delivered in a personalised and respectful manner.

Environment — Good

The environment at Ty Clyd supports people's safety, comfort and well-being. The home provides a clean, well maintained and welcoming environment that meets the assessed needs of people living there. People and visitors describe the service as "comfortable and homely."

The layout and design of the home promote independence, choice and social interaction. People have access to a range of communal lounges, dining areas and outdoor spaces that encourage participation in daily life and social engagement. People personalise their bedrooms with photographs, furniture and personal belongings, helping to create familiar surroundings and maintain a sense of ownership and identity. Outdoor areas, including gardens and walkways with seating, provide opportunities for relaxation and supports people's well-being.

People have access to equipment that supports their safety, mobility and independence. The service provides appropriate aids, including hoists, stand aids, mobility equipment, call systems, bed sensors and evacuation equipment. Staff maintain Personal Emergency Evacuation Plans (PEEPs) and review them regularly to ensure they reflect people's current needs. Secure arrangements are in place for the storage of medicines, hazardous substances and confidential information, helping to protect people and maintain safety within the home.

The service demonstrates positive health and safety practices. Fire safety equipment receives regular servicing and staff carry out fire drills to support emergency preparedness. Ongoing maintenance helps ensure the premises remains safe and suitable. People and their families report feeling safe within the environment and spoke positively about the quality of accommodation and facilities. Recent investment in improvements, including new carpeting and refurbishment of communal areas, further enhances the living environment.

The service continues to improve. There are plans to further develop outdoor facilities, including a more permanent sheltered outdoor area. Managers complete routine environmental checks, but records do not always clearly evidence what has been inspected, what actions have been identified and whether these actions have been completed.

Leadership & Management — Good

Leadership and management arrangements at Ty Clyd support the delivery of good quality care and promote regulatory compliance. The service benefits from a stable management structure. Staff spoke positively about leaders, describing them as "approachable, supportive and responsive." This creates a positive culture and provides staff with clear direction and support in their roles.

Managers use a range of systems to monitor service delivery, including training, supervision, incidents, accidents, complaints and medication management. They review accidents and incidents regularly, identify trends and take action to reduce risks and improve outcomes for people. Staff attend regular team meetings, including care and catering meetings, which support communication and service development. Structured supervision arrangements are in place, with records maintained for probationary and ongoing supervision. Recruitment practices generally meet regulatory requirements and include identity verification, references, Disclosure and Barring Service (DBS) checks and induction processes.

During the inspection, managers demonstrated a clear commitment to learning and improvement. Following inspection discussions, they introduced enhanced monitoring tools to strengthen oversight of personal plans and medication management. These actions reflect a proactive approach to addressing areas for development.

The providers policies and procedures are appropriate to the needs of the people supported by the service.

The provider seeks to gather information from a range of sources and continue to develop methods of gathering this information. Such as coffee mornings and activities.

Governance arrangements do not always provide sufficient assurance that systems operate effectively across all areas of the service. Inspection findings identified gaps within some staff files. Training records do not consistently highlight refresher requirements, reducing management oversight of compliance. In addition, some medication competency assessments require renewal. Further inaccuracies were found within people's personal plans. Due to this an area for improvement was issued around oversight.

Areas identified for improvement

Where we identify Areas for Improvement but we have not found outcomes for people to be at immediate or significant risk, we discuss these with the provider. We expect the provider to take action and we will follow this up at the next inspection.
