Findings:

Well-being — Good

Well-being at the service is good and people live healthily and safely with control over their lives. The service demonstrates a commitment to promoting independence and dignity. We saw people supported to make day-to-day decisions and spend the day as they wish, reflecting a person-centred approach. Care planning is proactive and responsive, ensuring changing needs are recognised early and addressed effectively. Staff show a clear understanding of each person's preferences and goals and those spoken with are knowledgeable of people's needs.

People are supported to cultivate safe and healthy relationships, and there is a clear emphasis on inclusion, respect and emotional wellbeing. People are encouraged to maintain contact with family and friends and to build new connections. Staff interactions are warm, respectful and compassionate. Where people require support with communication or social engagement, this is delivered sensitively and in ways that promote confidence and self-esteem. We saw a variety of activities available to people to enjoy if they choose, this includes indoor activities as well as community activities.

There are systems in place to ensure people are safe and protected from abuse and neglect. Safeguarding procedures are comprehensive, with staff demonstrating confidence in identifying, reporting and responding to concerns promptly. Risk assessments are detailed, regularly reviewed and proportionate, supporting safety without unnecessarily restricting independence.

People are encouraged and supported to express their concerns and preferences, and their dignity is consistently promoted. There is a written guide which informs people about their right and how to make a complaint if they wish. We saw clear efforts by staff to communicate with people in their preferred language with some staff actively learning a new language to support people whose first language is not English. Family ties are promoted and visitors are welcomed at any time. We saw families frequently updated about the care of their relatives and any concerns or issues swiftly dealt with by the management team. A relative spoken with told us "They are on the ball, they always keep me updated".

People live in accommodation that supports their well-being outcomes. Living spaces are well maintained, clean and appropriately adapted to meet assessed needs. People are encouraged to personalise their surroundings, contributing to a homely and reassuring atmosphere. The service has very pleasant safe and secure gardens which people can access freely.

Care & Support — Good

Care and support is good, with people supported to achieve their personal outcomes though high quality, person-centred care. The provider conducts detailed assessments to ensure they can meet people's needs before offering a service. Personal plans are written based on these assessments and are thorough, detailed and reviewed monthly, identifying any changes in needs as they arise. There are appropriate risk assessments in place which are comprehensive. The service reviews personal plans and risk assessments regularly and involves people and their families in these reviews. A relative spoken with told us, "They're marvellous, I can't fault them".

People are protected from harm and abuse, and there is a well-embedded safeguarding culture throughout the service. Staff are knowledgeable about their responsibilities and are confident in recognising and reporting concerns appropriately. Safeguarding procedures are clear and followed in practice, with records demonstrating timely responses and appropriate escalation where required. The RI and management team are proactive in identifying opportunities to enhance safety and ensure that any required improvements are communicated openly with staff. Health promotion is well established, with timely referrals made to external professionals such as dietitians and occupational therapists. This ensures a holistic approach to care. Staff display good awareness in relation to nutrition, hydration, falls prevention, and skin care. Documentation seen confirmed individuals' rights and freedoms are upheld, with any restrictive practices kept to a minimum and agreed upon through a multi-disciplinary team approach.

Overall, medication is safely managed, with processes in place to ensure medicines are administered, stored and recorded appropriately. Medication records are accurately completed, and audits are used effectively to identify and address any issues. There is a medication policy in place which is reviewed annually. Room temperature checks are completed daily, and we saw a good history of these which are in the correct range. We spoke to the manager about the need for fridge temperature checks to be completed daily. They assured us this would be completed going forward.

There are systems for infection prevention and control within the service. The environment is clean and clutter free. There is oversight in this area as regular audits are completed. Actions identified from these audits are completed within a clear timeframe. Staff training compliance in infection control currently needs improvement. We have discussed this with the RI and manager who have agreed to make the necessary improvements.

The service actively promotes the Welsh language and supports people to communicate in Welsh if they prefer.

Environment

Good

The environment is good, meeting people's needs and providing suitable spaces along with well-maintained facilities and equipment. The service is welcoming, homely and thoughtfully decorated. All areas are free of odours and efforts clearly made to maintain a high level of cleanliness and hygiene. There are a number of inviting communal areas where people can spend their time if they choose. During our visit we saw people relaxed and comfortable in their environment. A lift is in place enabling people to access both floors of the property. We saw people's bedrooms which are personalised and decorated to individual tastes and preferences. There are safe and secure gardens people can access freely which are well-maintained and accessible, with interesting features and areas to relax. There is a hair salon at the service with a regular hairdresser visiting. We saw people using this facility and appeared to very much enjoy themselves.

Equipment and adaptations are available where needed and these are well-maintained and serviced regularly. Staff told us there are sufficient supplies of equipment to enable them to complete their role effectively.

Care and support needs are met through safety management systems to minimise risks within the service. All required health and safety certifications are in place and up to date, including those relating to fire safety, gas and electricity, ensuring compliance with current legislation and guidance. Regular fire drills take place, and we saw records of these being completed. We saw records showing the regular servicing, maintenance and repairs of facilities ensuring the safety and well-being of people using the service. Daily, weekly and monthly checks are in place for health and safety checks such as water temperatures and fire safety checks. The service has recently been inspected by the Food Standards Agency and awarded a score of four, (Good). We saw the appropriate use of personal protective equipment and there are sufficient supplies of these.

Robust security arrangements are in place to protect people while safeguarding their rights, privacy and dignity. There is secure entry to the service and a visitor's book to ensure a log of people accessing the building is maintained whilst also complying with fire regulations.

Leadership & Management — Good

People are supported to achieve their outcomes because the service provider has effective organisational arrangements, governance and oversight to ensure smooth operations and high-quality care. There is a clear management structure in place, with defined roles and responsibilities that support accountability and consistency. Quality assurance systems are well established, including regular audits, monitoring and review processes that identify areas for improvement and drive service development. Feedback from people using the service, their relatives and professionals is actively sought and used to inform best practice.

Staff feel well supported due to visible and effective leadership. The RI and management team are approachable and actively involved in the service, providing practical and emotional support where needed. Arrangements are in place for supervision and appraisal. We saw recent improvements made in the frequency of these and were assured by the manager these would continue to be completed within regulatory timeframes. Regular team meetings promote open communication and staff engagement. Staff feedback was overall positive, and they told us they feel valued and have sufficient time to deliver person-centred care. Staff spoken with told us "Our manager is very supportive and genuinely cares" and "we work really well as a team and our manager is always here for us, their door is always open".

There is a low turnover of staff within the service, with a number of staff members employed at the service for many years. This contributes to consistency of care for people. All eligible staff are registered with Social Care Wales (SCW), ensuring compliance with professional standards. During our visit, we saw appropriate staffing levels to deliver care and support. Staff spoken with told us overall they had time to deliver care to people and did not feel rushed. We sampled staff files and saw safe recruitment practices are in place, with pre-employment and background checks completed prior to staff starting work at Ty Waunarlwydd. Ongoing checks are also undertaken to ensure staff remain suitable to work within the service. There are opportunities for staff to develop and progress within their roles, including access to further training and recognised qualifications.

Staff training compliance needs strengthening to ensure that all staff have the appropriate training, skills and competence to meet people's needs effectively. Current levels of compliance mean that outcomes for people may be adversely affected, as staff may not consistently have the knowledge and skills required to deliver safe and appropriate care. We expect the provider to take timely action to improve training compliance and ensure all staff complete the required training.
While we recognise that the availability of training courses is influenced by wider organisational arrangements beyond the control of the manager or RI, this does not remove the need for robust oversight and assurance. Overall, leadership and management is rated as good.
