Ty Machen is a small residential care home for adults, set in a quiet residential area near local shops and amenities. The service is provided in a single level property with level access to the front and rear gardens.

Well-being, care and support, environment and leadership and management are rated as excellent. We found evidence of an outstanding commitment to delivering an exceptional standard of care and support to people, to enable them to improve their independence and control over their lives and achieve highly personalised wellbeing goals and outcomes. The environment is monitored and updated in line with people's preferences, needs and enables them to achieve what matters to them. We found the highly effective leadership and management drives continual learning and development across all areas of the service, embedding a culture of reflection and empowerment.

Findings:

Well-being — Excellent

Well-being is excellent because people experience positive outcomes and are supported to have as much control over their day-to-day lives as possible. We saw people taking part in activities and routines that reflected their individual preferences and interests. People are treated with dignity and respect, and staff actively promote choice, independence and the achievement of personal goals. We saw support being provided to people with warmth and care, and interactions between people and care staff appeared friendly and relaxed.

People benefit from support which is responsive to their changing needs and enables them to make progress towards outcomes which are important to them. Regular reviews and monitoring help care staff recognise achievements and adjust support when required. Our observations and relative feedback demonstrated people have positive, respectful relationships with staff. These relationships support people to communicate their preferences, participate in daily life and receive support in ways meaningful to them.

People maintain important relationships and connections with family members, friends and their wider communities. Relatives described strong partnership working and told us they are kept informed and involved in decisions about their family member's care and support. Feedback highlighted the positive relationships which have developed between families and the staff team, and the efforts made to support people to participate in activities and family experiences which are important to them.

People are supported to remain well and to take an active role in making decisions regarding their health and well-being. Care staff support healthy lifestyles, access to appropriate healthcare and participation in activities which promote physical and emotional wellbeing.

People are supported by care staff who understand their safeguarding responsibilities and take action to protect them from harm. Leaders promote a culture of openness and learning and there was evidence of risks, restrictions and support arrangements being reviewed regularly to promote people’s autonomy. Records demonstrated appropriate arrangements were in place where restrictions were required, helping to ensure people receive support in the least restrictive way whilst maintaining their safety and wellbeing.

Care & Support — Excellent

Care and support is excellent because people receive exceptionally personalised support which reflects their assessed needs, preferences, what matters to them and their desired outcomes. We found care workers have a very strong understanding of people's individual needs, preferences and personal outcomes and can anticipate people's needs on their behalf. We reviewed a sample of care records and found personal plans clearly describe people's strengths, needs, routines, interests, needs and personal outcomes. Where people require support to identify personal goals, care staff who know them well identify meaningful outcomes on their behalf. This process is supported by the service's quality of life assessment tool, helping to ensure goals are individualised and reflect what is important to the person. Personal outcomes are monitored through monthly reviews, key-worker meetings and outcome-tracking systems to ensure they remain in line with what matters to the person.

Continuity is promoted by a highly consistent staff team and effective information-sharing with health and social care professionals and family members. Feedback from relatives confirmed staff understand people's individual needs, preferences and triggers and use this knowledge to tailor support to people. We read care records which evidenced proactive work with health and social care professionals and showed appropriate referrals are made when required, and professional guidance was incorporated into support plans. Relatives gave examples of staff helping people access health interventions they had previously found difficult or distressing and attributed this to the skills of the care staff and the service as a whole, along with a high level of consistency in how people are supported.

People's rights and freedoms are promoted through a person-centred and least restrictive approach to care. Records demonstrated appropriate arrangements where restrictions were required, and support plans reflected relevant legal safeguards. Staff demonstrated they understood how to balance safety with independence, and restrictions were reviewed and reduced where safe to do so.

People receive their medication in a safe and person-centred way. Medication records are accurate, regularly audited and reflect people's individual needs. Leaders demonstrate a proactive approach to continuous improvement by identifying opportunities to strengthen medication practices and implement well-considered changes to systems and oversight arrangements.

Environment — Excellent

The environment is excellent because people live in accommodation which significantly enhances their wellbeing, promotes independence and supports them to achieve positive outcomes. We observed a homely, welcoming environment which was clean, well maintained and carefully adapted to support people's comfort, dignity and wellbeing. The accommodation is arranged over a single floor with level access available to both the front and rear of the home, providing easily accessible outdoor space directly from the living areas. Bedrooms are highly personalised and reflect people's individual tastes and preferences, helping create a strong sense of ownership and belonging.

The provider has made considerable investment in the environment to ensure it continues to meet people's changing needs and preferences. Recent improvements include redecorating bedrooms, enhancing outdoor areas and creating additional opportunities for people to access and enjoy the grounds. The provider also demonstrates a strong commitment to continuous improvement, with further environmental enhancements planned to maximise independence, strengthen opportunities for participation and further support people to achieve positive well-being outcomes. People benefit from an environment which successfully balances safety with independence. We saw evidence that restrictions had been reviewed and reduced where possible. Leaders demonstrate a thoughtful and person-centred approach to risk management, ensuring environmental safety measures are proportionate and do not unnecessarily restrict people's freedom, choice or quality of life.

Robust systems are in place to maintain the premises and equipment to a high standard. Records demonstrate regular health and safety checks, servicing arrangements and environmental monitoring. Leaders respond promptly when issues are identified and use findings to inform continuous improvement. As a result, people benefit from living in an environment which is safe, well maintained and highly suited to their individual needs and preferences.

People benefit from highly effective arrangements to support their safety in the event of an emergency. Each person has a personalised emergency evacuation plan which reflects their individual needs and the support they require. Regular evacuation drills are undertaken at varying times and are carefully reviewed to identify any learning opportunities. Feedback from these exercises is shared with the manager and staff team, supporting continuous improvement and helping to ensure emergency procedures remain effective, well-coordinated and responsive to people's needs.

Leadership & Management — Excellent

Leadership and management is excellent because people achieve excellent outcomes as a result of highly effective leadership and governance arrangements. Leaders promote a very strong, inclusive and person-centred culture, with a clear focus on quality of life, independence and personal goals. Staff spoke extremely positively about the direction of the service and described significant improvements to systems, working practices and the environment. Relatives also expressed a high level of confidence in the leadership team and praised the organisation, communication and oversight within the service.

People benefit from a stable, committed and well-supported workforce. Staff described a positive team culture in which roles are clear, colleagues work effectively together and leaders are approachable for support, guidance and advice. Formal one-to-one supervision takes place at least every three months and includes reflective discussion about people's outcomes, staff wellbeing, performance and development. Annual appraisals provide a fuller review of achievements, skills and future objectives.

The provider demonstrates a very strong commitment to workforce learning and development. Training records show a comprehensive programme covering mandatory, specialist and service-specific subjects, with very high levels of compliance. Effective systems enable leaders to monitor training and respond promptly to development needs. Staff can also access leadership development opportunities, including programmes designed to support career progression and prepare staff for future leadership responsibilities.

People can be assured the provider follows robust recruitment procedures designed to promote their safety and well-being. We reviewed a sample of personnel records and found evidence appropriate pre-employment checks are completed, including obtaining references, verifying employment history and undertaking criminal records checks before staff commence employment. These arrangements help ensure people are supported by staff who have been assessed as suitable to work with vulnerable adults and can meet their needs safely.

Effective quality assurance arrangements enable leaders to understand performance, identify areas for development and take timely action. Audits, quality reviews and management oversight show improvements are implemented and monitored, helping the service remain responsive, well led and focused on positive outcomes.
