Findings:

Well-being — Good

People experience positive well-being outcomes because they are supported to have choice and control over their day-to-day lives. Care staff know people well and use this knowledge to provide care that reflects individuals' views, preferences and personal histories. This approach supports people to feel respected and valued. People are enabled to make meaningful choices about their daily lives. We observed people being actively involved in choosing their meals, with staff taking time to show options and support people to make decisions. People also have choice and flexibility around their routines, including when to get up and go to bed. Care staff told us the service is "not overly regimented", and this was reflected in practice.

We observed consistently warm, respectful and relaxed interactions between staff and people living at the home. Care staff demonstrated a good understanding of people's life experiences and what matters to them, which supported positive relationships and emotional well-being. Friends and relatives can visit at times which suit them and are made to feel welcome. Relatives described communication with the service as "good" and told us staff have a "good sense of humour" and communicate well with people. This contributed to a friendly, welcoming atmosphere where people appeared comfortable and at ease.

People are offered opportunities to take part in meaningful activities which reflect their interests and positively support their emotional well-being. We saw good examples of personalised activities being offered. Care staff told us they have time to spend on one-to-one engagement with people who prefer to spend time in their rooms, or whose care needs mean they cannot access communal areas. This helps ensure people remain socially engaged and supported according to their individual needs.

Families told us they feel their relatives are safe living at the home. There are effective systems in place to protect people from abuse and neglect, and the service operates in a transparent manner. Any concerns are appropriately reported to relevant agencies. The service has strong links with advocacy services, which supports people to have a voice. Staff are clear about their safeguarding responsibilities and told us they feel confident to raise concerns with managers.

People are supported by a skilled and appropriately trained workforce. We observed staff treating people with kindness, dignity and respect. Relatives told us they would feel confident raising any issues with the management team, which supports people's sense of safety and reassurance. People live in accommodation which supports their well-being, comfort and independence. The environment is adapted to meet people's individual needs. Bedrooms are personalised and homely, with ensuite facilities and sufficient space to accommodate any adaptations or equipment people

Care & Support — Good

People receive a good standard of care and support which meets their needs. The service completes thorough pre-admission assessments to ensure people's needs can be met safely before they move to the home. Personal plans describe how people wish to be supported and reflect their individual preferences. Plans are detailed and provide staff with clear guidance to deliver consistent, person-centred care. Care staff told us personal plans and risk assessments are sufficient and helpful in guiding how they support people on a day-to-day basis.

We observed people to receive care and support which was delivered in a dignified and respectful manner. Care staff spoke positively about their roles and told us they were "proud" of the care they provide, with a clear focus on person-centred approaches. The service takes a thoughtful and compassionate approach to behaviours that may challenge. Tools such as the "behaviours are emotions and feelings" sheet support staff to understand behaviours as expressions of unmet need rather than problems. This enables more appropriate and individualized responses and supports people's emotional well-being.

Families are involved in reviews and are kept informed of changes to care plans. Relatives told us the service "operates well and provides a good level of care". Regular reviews of care and risk take place, which supports the service to remain responsive to people's changing needs. We saw evidence of appropriate and timely referrals to health professionals where required. Deprivation of Liberty Safeguards (DoLS) referrals are made when care arrangements may restrict a person's liberty, ensuring people's rights and legal protections are appropriately considered.

Medicines are managed safely and effectively. There are clear and robust systems in place to support safe medicines administration and management. Medication records are well organised and easy to follow, providing assurance that medicines are administered safely and as prescribed.

People's dietary needs and preferences are met. Meals for people living at the service are prepared in the main kitchen of the extra-care complex and served in the service's dining room. People are also able to choose to eat in the main dining room if they wish. There is good availability of snacks and drinks in the kitchenette, which staff can prepare or support people to make between meals, helping promote comfort and choice.

Domestic and laundry services are provided by Codi staff, with no concerns raised by the service provider. Infection prevention and control practices are effective. The home is clean, well maintained and free from malodour. Personal protective equipment is readily available, laundry systems are well organised, and cleaning schedules are in place and used consistently.

Environment — Good

People live in an environment which meets their needs and supports their well-being. Ty Ynysawdre is located on the ground floor as part of a wider complex run by Codi. There are many facilities at the site, including communal areas, hairdressing salon, a restaurant and outside space, which residents can use should they wish. The service is accessed from the main building, with visitor sign in procedures and a separate dedicated access which helps keep people safe.

The home is clean, welcoming and well maintained. People can choose to spend time in communal areas to socialise or remain in their own rooms if they prefer. Communal areas are welcoming and support social interaction. The dining and lounge area is a bright space and has recently been updated with new flooring. There is level access to a large, enclosed garden area. There is a kitchenette area where people can be supported to make snacks and drinks, and this is also available to visitors. The spa space provides additional opportunities to enhance people's comfort and relaxation.

The service works well alongside Codi Housing Group and roles and responsibilities relating to the management of the service, and maintenance of the property were clearly understood. The service has systems in place to ensure that all health and safety checks are undertaken to necessary timescales. Fire safety assessment, checks and drills take place to ensure the safety of everyone within the home and personal emergency evacuation plans (PEEPs) containing key information are available in case of an evacuation. Areas of the home which could contain hazardous substances, such as the medication room and laundry are kept locked. An efficient maintenance team supports the service, helping ensure issues are identified and addressed promptly.

Leadership & Management — Good

People experience good outcomes because the service is led by an approachable and knowledgeable management team. Families told us they feel involved and informed, and any issues raised are responded to effectively. Care staff consistently described the manager as supportive, approachable and visible within the service. This makes them feel valued. There is confidence that any concerns will be dealt with effectively and in a timely fashion to ensure the wellbeing of the people who live at the home are met.

Care staff told us they work well together and feel supported by one another, contributing to a positive working culture and continuity of care for people. There is a strong sense of teamwork, with care staff describing the team as "supportive" and "brilliant". We heard how care staff are proud of the contribution they have to the lives of people at the home.

People are supported by a workforce which is safely recruited, trained and well supported. While the service continues to use agency staff, leaders ensure agency staff are familiar with the service and the people living there. This supports consistency of care, with some agency staff having taken up permanent roles. Care staff feel the induction process is good and training compliance is strong. We were told by care staff training prepares them well for their roles. Supervision and appraisal arrangements are well established, with good compliance. Staff have a clear understanding of expectations, and practice issues are addressed promptly. The manager leads by example and maintains high standards of practice. They actively support staff development and provide opportunities for them take on management responsibilities

There are regular audits, and quality assurance processes are used to monitor the service and identify areas for improvement. The Responsible Individual (RI) has good contact with the service beyond their quarterly monitoring visits. The biannual quality of care report is sufficient and evidences oversight of the service, with areas for improvement giving focus for future planning. The service works in accordance with corporate policies and procedures set by Bridgend County Borough Council. We identified some gaps in the timely review of policies. These sit within the wider organisational framework. Leaders demonstrated that day-to-day practice remains safe and continues to reflect current guidance.
