Summary:

People experience good wellbeing as there is a team of staff who support people to enjoy a good quality of life. People are listened to and respected. Care staff embrace their individuality and give them as much control over their day-to-day lives as possible.

Care and support is good as most personal plans and risk assessments provide a good insight into who people are and how they can be supported to achieve their goals. Improvements are required in ensuring certain behaviours are recorded. They are regularly reviewed and updated. People feel content doing things they enjoy in the home.

People live in an environment which is good. The home is clean, well maintained and suitably equipped. The internal and outside of the home has been de-cluttered and there is ongoing refurbishment of the service.
Leadership and management require significant improvement. The provider has made improvement in addressing most of the concerns at the last inspection, but some needed improvements still remain in relation to the quality-of-care review report, oversight of people's diet and fluid charts, risk assessments and infection prevention and control.

Findings:

Well-being Good

People can choose how to spend their time and are supported to make decisions about their day-to-day life. Records show people are asked about what is important to them and how their independence can be promoted. People have made friendships within the home, and this is supported through the facilitation of activities and spaces for people to socialise. Activities are tailored to people's interests and life history which is discussed as part of the admissions process. There are now suitable bathing facilities available to meet people's needs.

People benefit from a service which is committed to improvement. Improvements have been made to the storage of medication, and the environment has also been decluttered, contributing to a safer and more organised setting. People benefit from staff who receive appropriate supervision and access to relevant training to support them in their roles. We were informed that the quality of care is currently under review, with the provider awaiting the return of completed questionnaires to inform the development of the quality-of-care review report. The Responsible Individual (RI) visits the home regularly to monitor performance and ensure that standards are maintained.

The accommodation now provides a warm and welcoming environment, with a range of communal lounges available to support individuals in spending their time comfortably. An ongoing programme of redecoration and refurbishment is now in place, which supports the maintenance and overall condition of the home. People's mobility needs are supported through the provision of appropriate equipment, including mobility aids, strategically placed grab rails, and a lift to facilitate access between floors. The external grounds were also now seen to be maintained to an appropriate standard.

There are mechanisms in place to safeguard people living in the home. Staff receive safeguarding training and are supported by policies and procedures which ensure people know how to report concerns. The service effectively monitors incidents and accidents. Records show how any restrictions on people's liberty are made only in people's best interests and with full agreement from people, their family and the safeguarding authority. Some risk assessments and person plans are not robust and improvements are required. Improvements are required in relation to staff use of Protective Personal Equipment (PPE).

Care & Support — Good

People receive care and support that is person centred and delivered in line with their assessed needs and personal wishes. Personal plans are in place and are developed and reviewed with people, or their representatives. Records are updated appropriately when there is a change in people's needs. Information relating to people's life history, family relationships and interests is recorded, demonstrating how these aspects remain meaningful and relevant to their lives. We observed that care delivery reflected the information contained within care records. As a result, people experience positive outcomes because care and support consider all aspects of their well-being. However, improvements are required to ensure that all personal plans and risk assessments provide greater detail to consistently guide staff practice.

The service works closely with specialist health care professionals to ensure people's health and well-being is monitored. People's dietary and hydration needs are regularly observed but recording of people's fluid and diet intake requires improvement. People have access to health and social care professionals. Details of appointments are documented within people's personal plans and files to ensure staff access up to date information. We found people are referred to a chiropodist, an occupational therapist, and physiotherapist. Specialist equipment is available for those who require it.

People are supported to take part in activities that are meaningful to them. A hairdresser visits the home weekly, which people look forward to. Staff encourage and support people to pursue their interests and hobbies, and we observed positive interactions between people and staff. People have opportunities to participate in a range of activities, including arts and crafts, baking, yoga, and choosing their own sweets from a visiting sweet shop. Opportunities are also available for people to access the local community through external visits. However, some staff told us they do not always have sufficient time to sit and talk with people due to competing care duties. The provider is actively working to resolve internet connectivity issues within the home to further support people's access to online activities and communication.

Medication management processes have improved and are robust and safe. Medicines are stored appropriately in line with regulatory requirements. Staff have access to up-to-date policies and procedures that support safe medication practices. Care staff receive training in medication administration and complete competency assessments with senior staff to ensure safe practice.

Information posters promoting effective hand hygiene are displayed in bathrooms, and the provider completes hand-washing audits with staff. Personal protective equipment (PPE) stations are positioned along corridors, and pedal-operated bins are available to support the safe disposal of used PPE. Care staff receive training in infection prevention and control. However, practice is not always consistent with the infection control policy, as we observed some staff did not remove their PPE promptly after care tasks had been completed.

Environment

Good

The provider has strengthened systems for monitoring health and safety and for reducing associated risks to people living in the home. The environment is warm, comfortable, secure, and now adequately maintained. Maintenance records reviewed demonstrated that routine utilities testing is completed, and a robust system is now in place to record and monitor maintenance requests. Hazards have been reduced through improved storage arrangements and better storage of consumable items. Significant improvements have been made to ensure both the internal and external environments are clean and free from hazards. The external grounds and the home have been de-cluttered, and quotes have been obtained for the replacement of some windows.
The home now undertakes, and will continue to undertake, regular deep cleaning. Additional domestic staff have been recruited and are awaiting recruitment clearance. Decoration has been completed in key areas, skirting boards have been deep cleaned, and new flooring has been laid in the laundry room. There are now sufficient bathing facilities to meet people's needs.

Leadership & Management

Requires Significant Improvement

Governance and oversight arrangements within the service have strengthened since the last inspection. The RI now actively monitors the quality of the service, undertaking regular visits and producing detailed reports that include feedback on people's experiences. Substantial progress has been made towards achieving compliance since the previous inspection, supported by an action plan that is reviewed regularly by the manager. All notifiable events are now reported to CIW. However, the six-monthly quality of care review has yet to be completed, as the service is awaiting the return of questionnaires to inform this process. Further improvements are required in relation to person-centred care planning, risk assessments, the oversight of people's diet and fluid intake, and the monitoring of people's repositioning needs. Improvements are also required in the correct and consistent use of PPE, particularly in light of the recent significant infectious disease outbreak within the home. This continues to put people at risk of poor outcomes, and the provider must take immediate steps to address these issues.

The service provides a comprehensive programme of mandatory training to ensure staff are suitably skilled and supported in their roles. Progress has been made in increasing staffing levels, and a dependency assessment tool is now in place to support the determination of safe staffing arrangements. Staff demonstrated a clear understanding of the procedures to follow should they have concerns about people's health or welfare. Formal one-to-one supervision is provided at least every three months, alongside an annual appraisal. The provider ensures staff receive training that is specific to their role and is currently in the process of sourcing additional specialist training in dementia care. Staff morale has been identified as low; however, the provider is taking steps to address this and improve staff wellbeing.

Areas identified for improvement

Where we identify Areas for Improvement but we have not found outcomes for people to be at immediate or significant risk, we discuss these with the provider. We expect the provider to take action and we will follow this up at the next inspection.

Where we find outcomes for people require significant improvement and/or there is risk to people's well-being we identify areas for Priority Action. In these circumstances we issue a Priority Action Notice(s) to the Provider, and they must take immediate steps to make improvements. We will inspect again within six months to check improvements have been made and outcomes for people have improved.

The table(s) below show the area(s) for priority action and/or those for improvement we have identified.

CIW has no areas for improvement identified following this inspection.

Summary of areas for Priority Action	Date identified
People cannot be confident systems are in place to ensure they are provided with the opportunity to fully meet their wellbeing outcomes. The RI must ensure there is a detailed review of the service.	30/11/23
People cannot yet be assured that the service is consistently provided with appropriate supervision and oversight, as improvements remain ongoing within the service. The provider must ensure there is robust oversight of the service so that people are adequately supported to achieve their personal outcomes.	15/01/26
